

Jeff Bezos

How he made room for better decisions

WHO HE IS

Founded Amazon in 1994 and Blue Origin.

Amazon grew from books into a global business.

His first meeting started at 10 a.m.

10:00 first meeting

The clock time was his choice, not a rule to copy.

01 / REST

8 hours

of sleep was his usual target.

02 / MORNING

Unhurried

Newspaper, coffee, breakfast with kids.

The idea: arrive at demanding work with attention to spare.

Source: Economic Club of Washington interview, Sept. 2018

Protect the hours that need your mind.

BEFORE LUNCH

Hardest meetings first

He put demanding discussions earlier, when he felt sharpest.

3 good decisions could be enough

in a day, he said of his executive role.

His measure of a good day was decision quality, not the number of filled hours.

Quality takes an honest estimate.

In his 2017 letter, Bezos said high standards can be learned. He highlighted two practices:

1

Recognize quality

Know what good work looks like.

2

Respect the scope

Know how much work it really takes.

HIS EXAMPLE

A strong six-page memo can take a week or more to write and revise.

Borrow the principle.
Choose your own hour.

You do not need a founder's schedule. Try this:

01 FIND
Pick your clearest 30 minutes.

02 PROTECT
Give one important task that time.

03 REVIEW
Notice the time and the quality.

MAKE THE PRACTICE VISIBLE

TikTym tracks the minutes you gave it.

Your judgment decides what to improve.

PHOTO / CC BY 2.0
"Jeff Bezos' iconic laugh crop" by Steve Jurvetson;
cropped by King of Hearts; further cropped by TikTym.
https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Jeff_Bezos%27_iconic_laugh_crop.jpg
https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/2.0/